3. Followup - Local Planning for Source Protection of Watersheds

Federal law requires the protection of watersheds. The Division of Drinking Water has enacted rules requiring water suppliers to take measures to protect their water sources. Water suppliers do not have control over land use thus they are unable to protect water sources. Municipalities and counties are given authority to regulate land use (state and federal lands are exempt). In June, the committee requested the Department of Environmental Quality meet with affected parties and report back with recommendations. The status of a proposal requiring the coordinated development of land use plans protecting the watershed will be presented.
